WALNUT

A close-up photograph of several walnut kernels, showing their characteristic wrinkled, light brown surface. The kernels are piled together, with some in sharp focus and others blurred in the background.

General

Packed walnut kernels are made on the basis of technical specifications that specify minimum quality indicators that we have to meet consumption.

Emphasis is placed both on sensory properties (appearance, aroma, taste) that produce pleasant sensation on the consumer, and the physical-chemical qualities, which guarantees a certain content of useful substances in food.

Packed walnut kernels is obtained by applying appropriate technologies, including the main storage phase nuts in the shell, cracking nuts, nutmeg and packaging sorting nutmeg. Each phase performs the execution of operations that are performed by processes and methods that lead to obtaining the best possible quality products. The technological process of manufacturing itself packed walnut kernels contains a series of stages in series, the main ones being: the reception nuts in the shell, store nuts in the shell, cracking walnuts, walnut kernels sorting and packing nut stones.
